

In the Library Annex

In the library annex
the aged men sit,
reading newspapers
from worlds where they once lived and never would again.

They rarely speak
of the times they spend packing and
unpacking the past,
the intrepid dreams
and the alternate
histories that stream
within their minds.

—Bruce Boston

