

The Next Step

The successful barnacle
will be a self-starter, perfectly willing to relocate.

The successful barnacle
will not be looking for a handout.
It will only be seeking a reliable outflow.

The successful barnacle
will learn to eat plastic and like it.

The successful barnacle
will understand that animals are just mobile sacs
of seawater.
It will act on that knowledge.

The successful barnacle
will not tolerate
the world's fresh water for long.

The successful barnacle
will coat the continents and learn to filter
the air.

The successful barnacle
will not listen to excuses,
it will not listen,
at all.

The successful barnacle
will take the view
that just because a thing has been around for a long time does not make it
necessary.

—Timons Esaias